The Queen's diary

The Queen's diary of engagements is very busy. The New Year begins with the Queen and the Duke of Edinburg in residence at Sandringham, the Queen's private home in Norfolk. Her official work is combined with time for riding and reading.

The Queen, whose actual birthday is in April, celebrates her official birthday in June.

The Queen holds her first of each summer's garden parties in the Palace of Edinburgh; three more are held in the gardens of Buckingham Palace.

The summer break is spent at the Queen's private home in Scotland, Balmoral castle, and is followed by the regular autumn schedule-the State Opening of Parliament.

A day in December is always set aside for the Queen to record her radio and television Christmas broadcast. She speaks personally to the Commonwealth.

Around these fixed dates the official engagements go-meetings with Prime Minister, Ambassador and Officials, visits around the United Kingdom, official State visits overseas and tours of Commonwealth countries. The Private Secretary also has to allow time- each week- for the Queen to deal with her desk.

Each Private Secretary knows too that time will be needed for the charitable activities which engage all the members of the Royal family.
