

Prestigious professions

The "golden" dream of every modern person is a prestigious profession, popular and bringing a good income. However, a prestigious profession is not always the most profitable profession, and even yesterday the popular profession suddenly becomes forgotten and unclaimed.

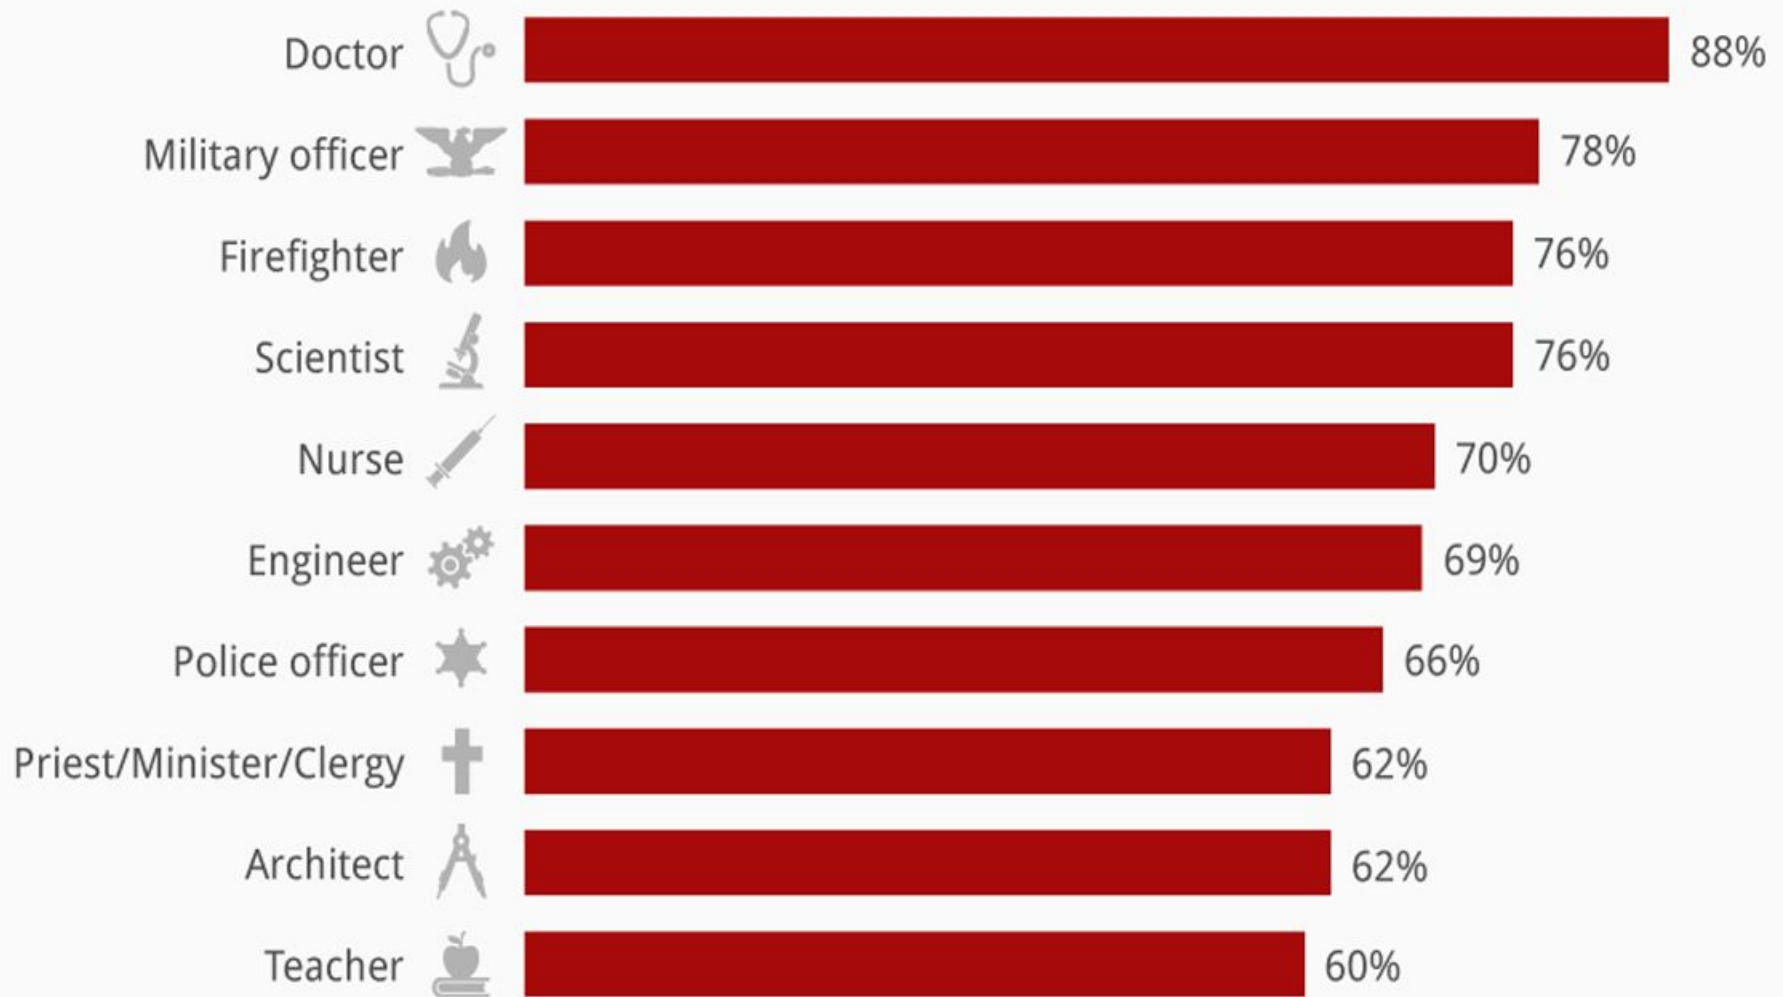

When examining prestigious jobs, this is basically a socially constructed factor and something which is dependent on the perceptions of external forces. Of course, money plays a big role in determining prestige. Even though money is not considered as the only defining factor, however, prestige is based on how much a certain occupation is believed to make. You also have to remember that there are some jobs that are still prestigious even though not much money is earned from doing those jobs.

America's Most Prestigious Professions

% of people finding the following occupations prestigious

n=2,537

@StatistaCharts

Source: Harris Interactive

Interestingly, while doctors also top the most respected professions that also pay well, most parents in America still encourage their children to study engineering. This is mainly because of the prestige that comes with being an engineer. Nevertheless, the medical sector remains as one of the highly respected occupations.

6 of the most prestigious professions

1. Lawyer. For more than 15 years, this profession has been extremely prestigious among men and women. It is rather difficult to enroll in the law faculty since there are much more people willing to master this specialty than places in higher educational institutions. But those who manage to obtain a diploma of a lawyer can confidently count on working in a prestigious firm with high pay.

2. Specialist in IT-sphere. Work with information technology is prestigious and in demand. True specialists in this field often work not only in one place but at once in several organizations, then they ensure a high income

3. Manager. Today, this word means a lot. The manager's position is in every company, even with a small staff. Work with customers, offer goods and services, engage in the development of advertising - this is one of the main responsibilities of the manager.

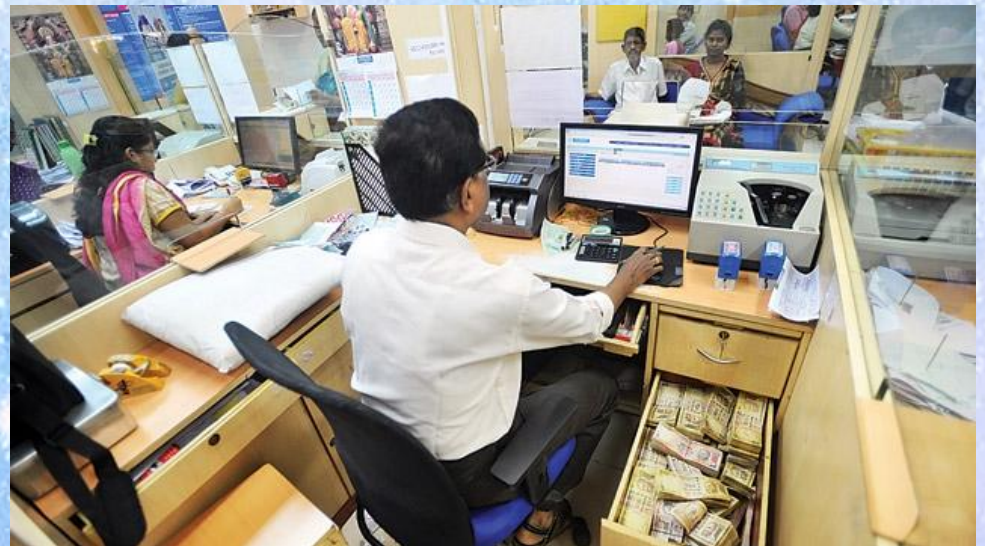

4. The fashion designer. In the employment agencies and Internet sites, there are very few fashion designer vacancies. Nevertheless, the fashion designer is one of the most prestigious professions, as it allows you to work creatively and be aware of new fashion.

5. Accountant. An experienced accountant never sits without a job. Also, people who own this profession can expect a high salary and the employer's compliance with all the norms of the Labor Code.

6. The Employee of the bank. Most people associate this work with one of the most prestigious professions. Excellent working conditions, high pay, career growth and demand are the main characteristics of this profession.

Thanks For Attention

