

Russia day (Russia's independence Day)

In 1994 Boris Yeltsin, the first President of the Russian Federation issued a decree on June 12 gives national importance - Day of Declaration of state sovereignty of Russia

The document itself was signed four years earlier at the first Congress of people's deputies of the RSFSR in the conditions when the former republics of the Soviet Union one for another became independent. Later this day began simply called independence Day. It is worth noting that the June 12 in addition to the "independence" of Russia became the first popularly elected President.

In 1994 this day was declared a public holiday. Formally, is the most important modern public holiday in the country

In his speech in 1998, Boris Yeltsin tried once and for all to stop wandering views from around 12 June to be observed as the Day of Russia. Officially, the new name of the holiday was only on 1 February 2002 when entered into force the provisions of the new Labor code.

The day of Russia today

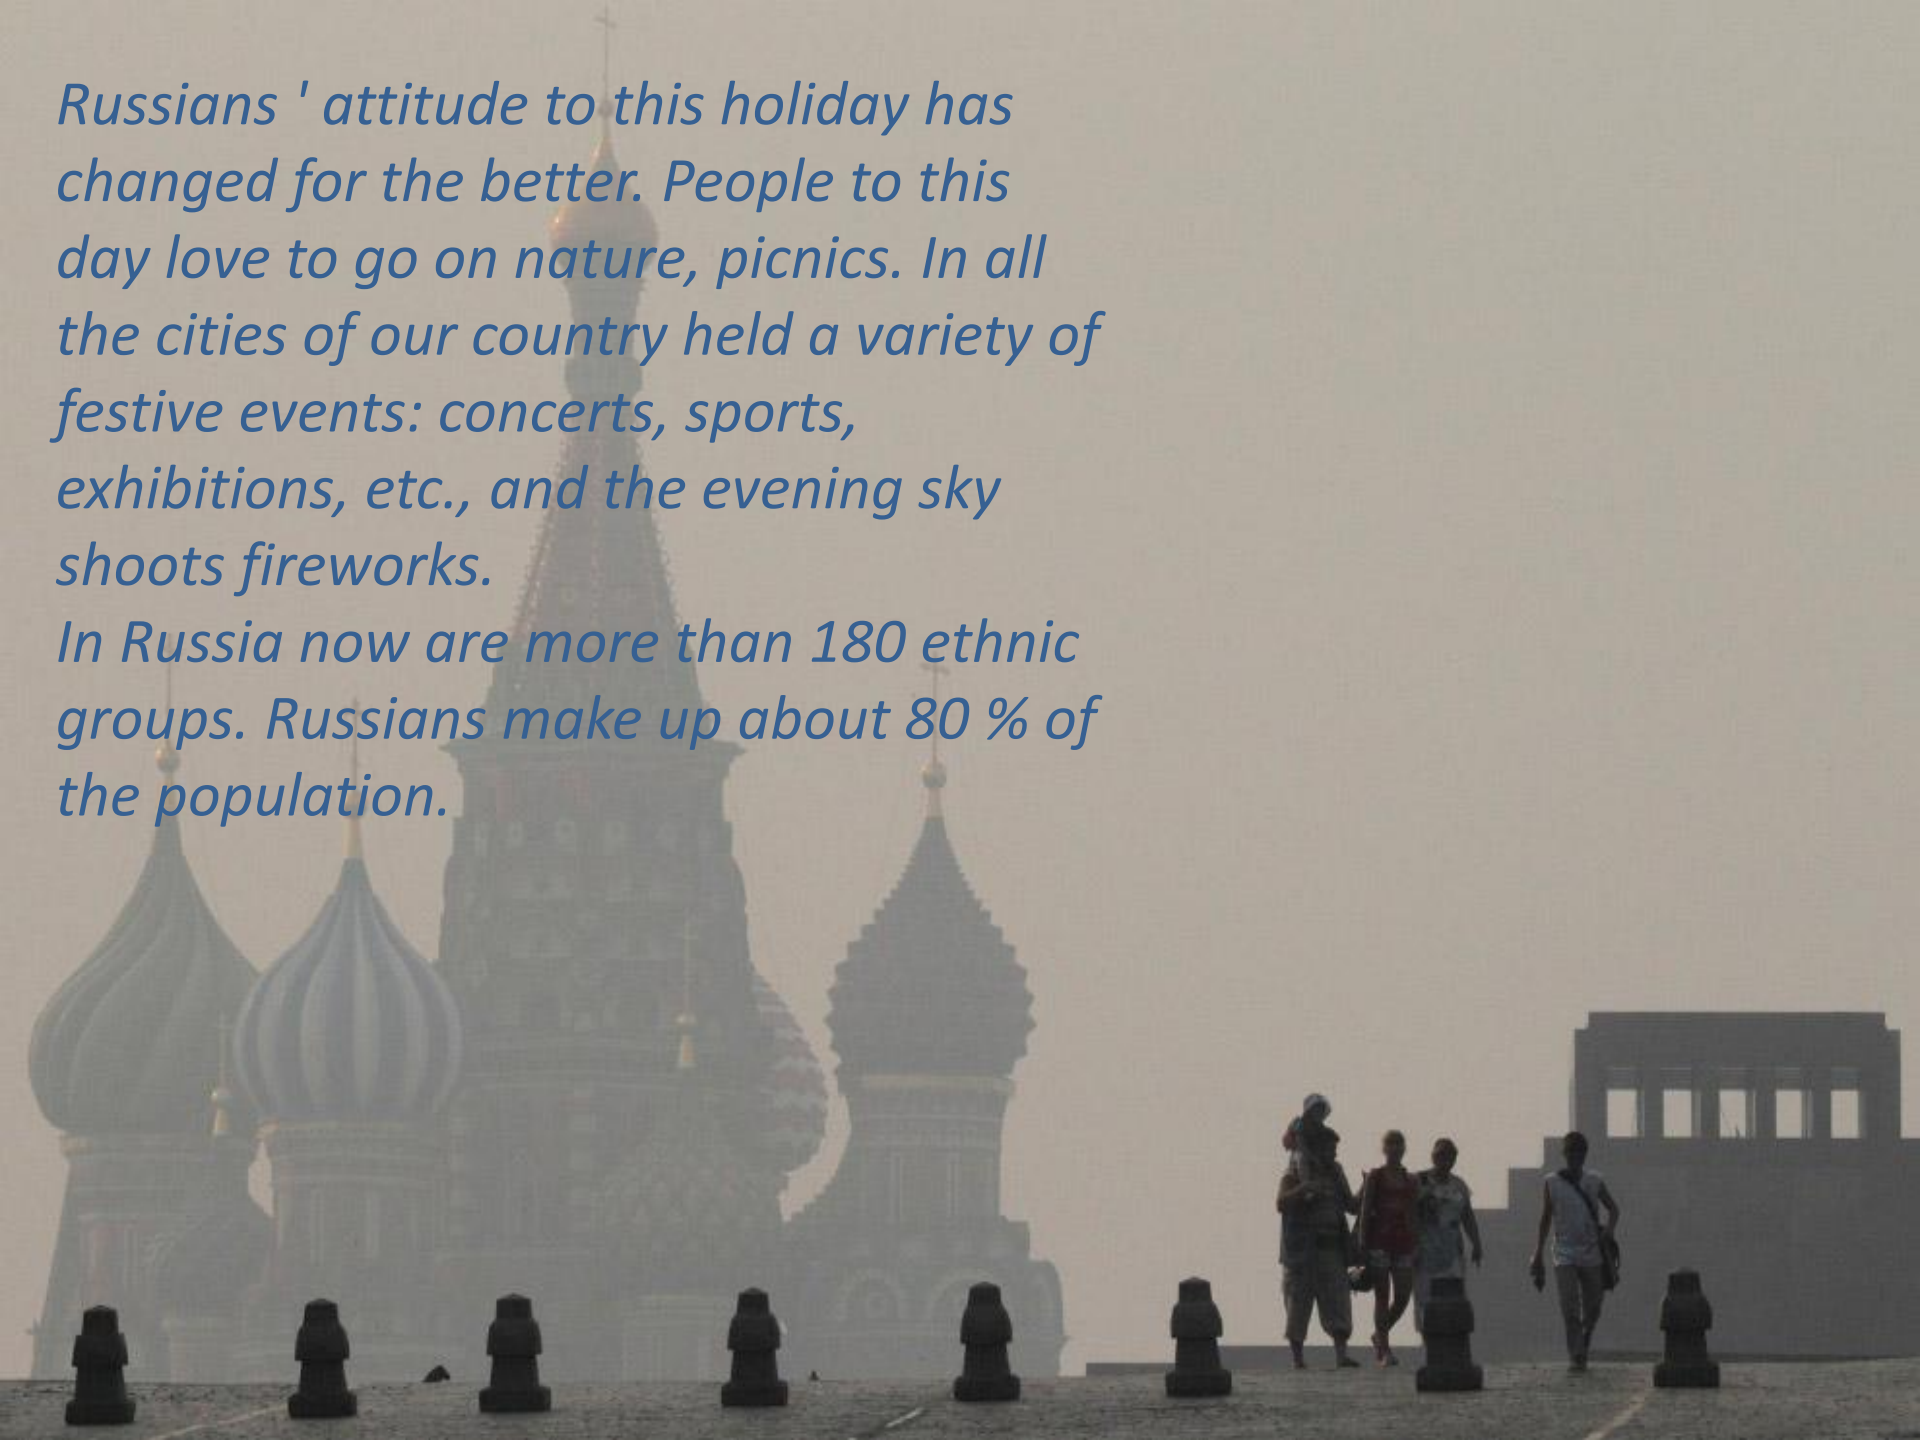

Now Russia Day — a holiday of freedom, civil peace and good agreement of all people on the basis of law and justice.

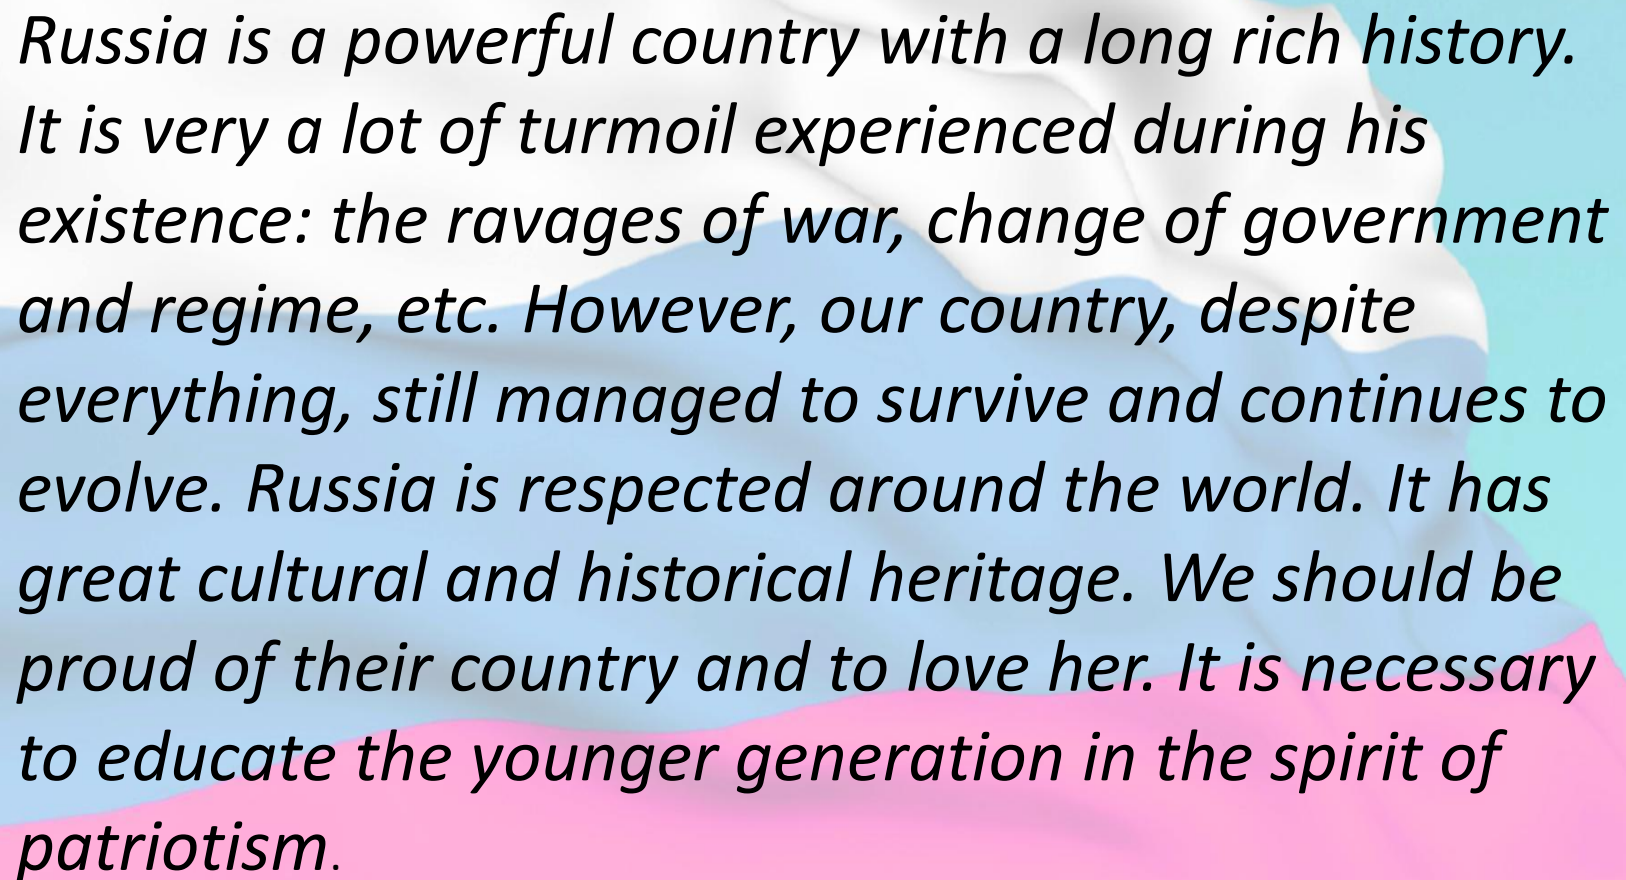

This holiday is a symbol of national unity and shared responsibility for the present and future of our country

Russians ' attitude to this holiday has changed for the better. People to this day love to go on nature, picnics. In all the cities of our country held a variety of festive events: concerts, sports, exhibitions, etc., and the evening sky shoots fireworks.

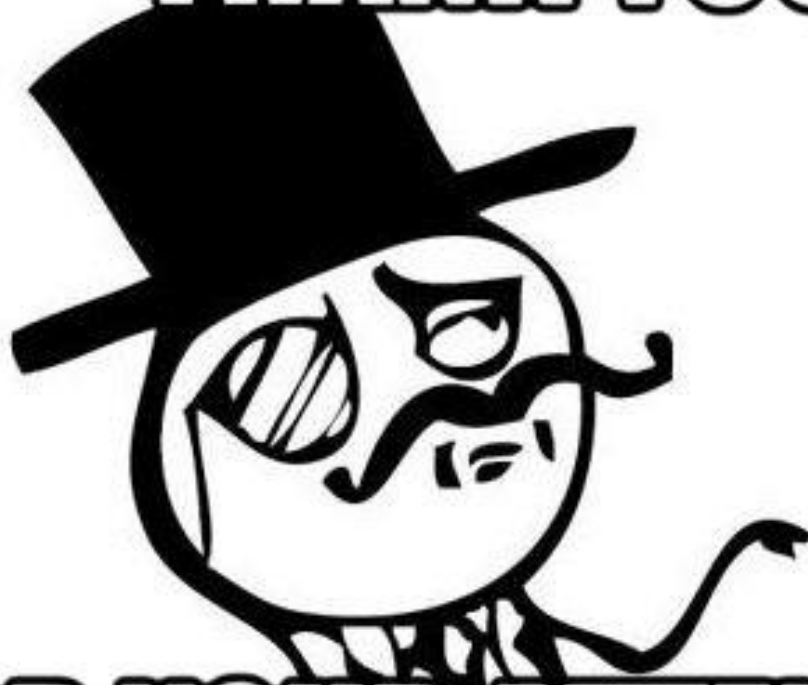

In Russia now are more than 180 ethnic groups. Russians make up about 80 % of the population.

Russia is a powerful country with a long rich history. It is very a lot of turmoil experienced during his existence: the ravages of war, change of government and regime, etc. However, our country, despite everything, still managed to survive and continues to evolve. Russia is respected around the world. It has great cultural and historical heritage. We should be proud of their country and to love her. It is necessary to educate the younger generation in the spirit of patriotism.
