

Today is gonna be the day, you hear somebody say "I need you right away"

A ^{hellknigh} Love Letter

How to Confess Your Love in a Letter.

Be totally honest.

Now is not the time to stand on ceremony. The true emotion of what you write will speak for you, so use this to your advantage. Because it is so hard to say aloud, allow the freedom of writing to help you express how you really feel. The recipient of the letter will most likely be moved to tears at your confession, and may be ready to return the gesture!

Keep your dignity.

Even though you're pouring your heart out onto the page, try to avoid giving the impression that your life will end without the other person. It should come off as an open confession of your feelings and not a desperate cry for help.

Maintain some confidence and self-esteem in your letter, even as you express your affection to the object of your affection.

Don't act possessive.

If you are going to confess your love to someone, you're probably already a little worried about seeming awkward, when all you really want to do is express how you really feel. Fortunately, it's not too hard to understand it. Simply look over your letter to make sure that you never make any assumptions about the two of you "belonging together." Focus on your own feelings without projecting anything on other person. This way, they will know emotions are honest.

Make it unconditional.

We know it's a real risk putting yourself out there, and one only you can decide to make. But, no matter how nervous you are, always keep in mind that you stand a better chance if the object of your affection sees you as a warm, open-hearted person. As you tell them how you feel, also let them know that you won't hold it against them if they don't return your feelings. This will help you to recover easily if they don't reciprocate with you.

Double-check everything.

The luxury of letter-writing is that it gives you the opportunity to stop yourself from saying anything that you don't mean to say. Once you've written your letter, read it over carefully to make sure that it comes off as heartfelt, honest, and clear. This doesn't mean you should obsess too much, of course.

★ Glee Cast - Total Eclipse of The Heart

