In Scotland, the New Year's Eve celebration is called HOGMANAY which means 'new morning' in Celtic.

It is the most important celebration of the year.

a Christmas tree

Preparations for the celebrations start early on 31st of December.

People make festive dishes and also bake special shortbread biscuits and a rich fruit cake called 'Black Bun', to share with family and friends on the big day.

On the night of Hogmanay there live concerts and fabulous street parades in all Scottish towns.

There lots of street parades.

A lot of excited people dress up in colourful costumes.

In some cities there is also a long torchlight procession through the streets.

Villagers carry burning barrels.

It's an old tradition.

Edinburgh at Hogmanay night

As soon as the bells chime twelve, everyone kisses and heartily wishes each other a Happy New Year.

*Then people join hands and proudly sing the traditional song
'Auld Lang Syne'.*

*'Should auld acquaintance be forgot and never brought to mind?
Should auld acquaintance be forgot and auld lang syne
For auld lang syne, my dear, for auld lang syne,
We'll take a cup o kindness yet, for auld lang syne.'*

The first-footing tall dark-haired man with a piece of coal is for luck!

After that there is a stunning fireworks display.

Everyone has a great time.

A happy family at the 1st of January.

On the 1st of January people feel happy to be with friends and family and their neighbours and look forward to a good year full of success.

Happy New Year!
