The school day in England

The normal school day in England is from nine o'clock to half past three. Pupils must stay at school all the time. The day starts with registration. The class teachers check who is at school and who is absent.

Then there is assembly. The headmaster or headmistress reads out some important notices.

At lunch time some pupils go home for lunch, but most pupils go to the canteen. They can choose traditional or fast food.

The afternoon begins with registration again. School finishes at half past three.

Pupils don't go to school on Saturday and Sunday.
