Bikers - originally British youth subculture that evolved out of the teddy boys in the 1960s. They wore black leather jackets and jeans and boots; had greased hair and rode motorcycles and listened to rock'n'roll. They were largely unskilled manual laborers.

For this group,
motorcycles were adopted
not as a style of transport but as a style of life. They represented a way of living, perspective and conviction
- an alternative to mainstream society.

Their motto 'Too fast to live, too young to die' symbolized this view.

Contemporary definition of biker: a person who leads a lifestyle that revolves around being part of the brotherhood of motorcycle riders, they share traditional attitudes about the code of the road.

They listen to rock music. Their clubs are very famous all over the world and attract a lot of guests.

Bike subculture appeared in Russia with the appearance of Moscow motorbike club "Night Wolves". Officially it was founded on May 31, 1989. A "Night Wolf" No 1, nicknamed "The Surgeon" got his motorbike from his grandfather.

The Surgeon (he is a real surgeon) together with his friends kept order at the concerts of underground musicians as "Hells Angels" did it. Working as guards is classical pastime of bikers.

The club is famous not only in Russia but also all over the world. The first Russian Bike Show, which took place in 1995 attracted a lot of guests from abroad.

Today there are 30,000 bikers in Russia, and 5,000 in Moscow.

A biker in Russia prefers a heavy bike like Harley Davidson (a large, heavy, American motorcycle) and a leather jacket.

Some people consider bikers aggressive. But in most cases they have only threatening appearance.
