

A photograph of Candy Dulfer performing on stage. She is a blonde woman with long hair, wearing a dark, sequined, sleeveless top and a silver, shimmering skirt. She is holding a gold saxophone and singing into a microphone. Her hands are raised in a rhythmic gesture. She is wearing several bracelets on her wrists, including a purple one on her left and a silver one on her right. The background is dark and out of focus, showing another person's head in the distance.

Candy Dulfer

Timofeyev U.A.

- Candy Dulfer (born 19 September 1969) is a Dutch jazz and pop saxophonist from the Netherlands. She is the daughter of jazz saxophonist Hans Dulfer. She began playing at age six and founded her band Funky Stuff when she was fourteen. Her debut album Saxuality (1990) received a Grammy nomination.

Early life

- Dulfer was born on September 19, 1969 in Amsterdam, Netherlands. She began playing the drums at the age of five. As a six-year-old, she started to play the soprano saxophone. At age seven, she switched to alto saxophone and later began playing in a local concert band Jeugd Doet Leven (English translation: "Youth Brings Life") in Zuiderwoude.

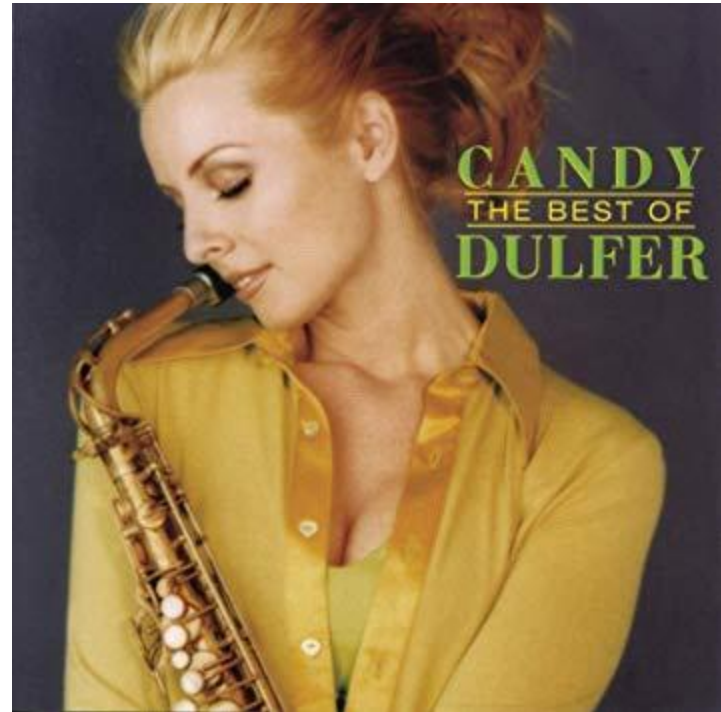

Career

- Dulfer's band performed throughout the Netherlands and in 1987 was the opening act for two of Madonna's European concerts.
- In 1988, Prince invited Dulfer on stage to play an improvised solo during one of his European shows. In 1989 Dulfer appeared in Prince's "Partyman" video. Dulfer performed session work with Eurythmics guitarist and producer Dave Stewart and was a guest musician for Pink Floyd during the band's performance at Knebworth in 1990, from which several tracks were released on a multi-artist live album and video, Live at Knebworth '90.

Discography

- ❖ Saxuality
- ❖ Sax-a-Go-Go!
- ❖ Big Girl
- ❖ For the Love of You
- ❖ Girls Night Out
- ❖ What does it take
- ❖ Dulfer Dulfer
- ❖ Right in my soul
- ❖ Candy Store

Let's listen to her music

Thank you for attention!