Where do they live?

Parrots live in the tropical rainforest.

Camels live in the desert.

‘we should close all zoos and return the animals to their natural habitats.’

+ pros

- Zoos help certain animal species survive.
- They are educational; children have the chance to see wild animals.

- cons

- Animals should not live in cages. They should be free.
- The environment is not ideal so some animals die.
- In some zoos animals are mistreated.

- Would you like to have a monkey as a pet? To feed it and play with it and take it to the park? Well, think twice before you make any decisions. Things are not that simple.
- Sure, on the one hand owning a wild animal is a very good way to learn about it. You also help conserve it.
- On the other hand, there are certain drawbacks to keeping a wild animal as a pet. Most owners do not know how to look after a wild animal properly and books on the subject are not always accurate. Wild animals need special food and they often get sick when they do not live in their natural habitats. Furthermore, they can be dangerous.
- To sum up, there are strong arguments both for and against keeping wild animals as pets. However, I believe that animals have rights, too, and that they should not be forced to live in strange environments. We should adopt animals in zoos rather than keep them as pets.
