Sitting on postesses,
Eating buttered toastesses,
Greasing up their fistesses,
Up to their wristesses.

- Hallowe'en is coming.
What will you wear?

I might wear a blanket
And be a brown bear.

Hallowe'en is coming.
Who will you meet?

I might meet a princess
Skipping down the street.

Hallowe'en is coming.
What will you do?

I might go
trick-or-treating.
How about you?

Hallowe'en is coming.
What will you be?

I might be a pirate
On the deep blue sea.

Hallowe'en is coming.
What will you see?

I might see a
Jack-o'-Lantern
Winking at me.

Hallowe'en is coming.
What will you be?

It's a secret,
So, wait and see!

A dramatic, low-angle shot of a large, multi-story Victorian-style house at night. The house is illuminated from within, with warm yellow light glowing from several windows and a central tower. The architecture features ornate details, including a prominent turret on the left and a central spire. In the foreground, a large, intricate spiderweb is stretched across the frame, its threads catching the light and creating a shimmering, ethereal effect. The background is a deep, dark blue night sky, with the silhouettes of bare, gnarled tree branches framing the scene. The overall atmosphere is mysterious and spooky, typical of a Halloween-themed illustration.

When people come to see 'em
