

* India is dirty and poor

In fact, India is very different. Arriving there as a tourist, you can see the fabulous luxury, wealth, poverty and dirt. Because everything is there. On average, the Indians are very clean in who regard themselves and their homes, but I did not care about the cleanliness of the streets. So often in the streets between pretty clean houses strewn trash heap. Hot climate contributes to the garbage that rapidly decomposes and stinks.

*There's cows walk the streets.

- *Yes, go. Sometimes the stores go.
- *These cows are fed on garbage heaps, like stray dogs.
- *Cows do not beat - a sacred animal. But do not take care of them - it's just a stray cow.
- *Who milks them, I do not know.

* Indians are poor but happy

* Not all Indians are poor. Rather one can speak of a sharper than us, the division of society into rich and poor. There are billionaires with their own aircraft, and there are people living in tents of plastic bags. Indians are very practical. They are hard to knock sacrifice something for the sake of ideas not for the sake of personal convenience or benefit. So they have less stress-related problems at work.

 India is a country of saints.
Indians are very emotional people.

* Indians are practical people. And religion they most often is practical. They pray, go to church and leave donations to live better. For example, Indians make donations publicly. Lists of those who left donations and programming are usually posted in a conspicuous place.

*Indians speak Hindi

*Each state of India has its own local language, and that language and 2-3. Hindi language more or less understood only in the north of India. Other languages northern India belong to the same language group as Hindi. They are related as much as, for example, Russian and Polish.