

Andy Warhol

Andy Warhol was a U.S. artist famous for his paintings of Campbell Soup cans and portraits of celebrities. Warhol himself became a celebrity, in part because of his unusual personality and sense of style

After graduating in 1949, he moved to New York City. There he drew illustrations for advertisements. But he wanted to be an artist whose works were shown in art galleries.

In 1962 Warhol showed some of his paintings at a gallery.

He had painted soup. The

Campbell's art style.

By 1963 Warhol had begun to make pictures from photographs. He started creating portraits of such stars as Marilyn Monroe and Elvis Presley. He made numerous portraits of the same person using different bright colors for each picture.

do not for sale this desktop work image, only be used for your personal use only desktop work (c) arts-wallpapers.com

Warhol called the place where he created his art the Factory.
The Factory became a place for unusual and famous people to meet.

In 1968 one of Warhol's followers shot and nearly killed him. After recovering, Warhol continued to make art. He died in New York City on February 22, 1987.

Andy Warhol THE WARHOL COLLECTION

To cite this page:

MLA Style: "Warhol, Andy." Britannica Elementary Library. Encyclopædia Britannica 2009 Ultimate Reference Suite. Chicago: Encyclopædia Britannica, 2009.

APA Style: Warhol, Andy. (2009). Britannica Elementary Library. Encyclopædia Britannica 2009 Ultimate Reference Suite. Chicago: Encyclopædia Britannica.

