History of Buckingham Palace

BUCKINGHAM PALACE
FROM THE GARDENS

Buckingham Palace in 1808

The history of Buckingham Palace began in 1702 when the Duke of Buckingham had it built as his London home. The Duke's son sold the house in 1761 to George III., it was renamed "Queen's House" in 1774 as Queen Charlotte resided there. Queen Victoria was the first monarch to take up residence in Buckingham palace in 1837.

It was Queen Victoria's death that the Palace metamorphosed into today's familiar landmark.

More than 600 rooms, including 52 Royal and guest bedrooms, 188 staff bedrooms, 92 offices and 78 bathrooms.

A photograph of the main entrance to Buckingham Palace in London. The image shows a large, ornate wrought-iron gate flanked by two tall, classical stone pillars topped with decorative lanterns. The gate is set against the grand facade of the palace, which features a prominent portico with columns. The scene is captured in bright daylight under a clear blue sky. The text "So, this is Buckingham Palace" is overlaid in red cursive script across the center of the image.
