|-------------------------------------|--|
| the Speaker | the lords and ladies sit here. This chamber is also called the Parliament Chamber. |
| the Chamber of the House of Lords | MPs sit here |
| the Lord Chancellor | when the Queen arrives in the House of Lords to open the Parliament, she sits on this. |
| the Woolsack | there is wool inside. It's a part of a very old tradition which started in the 14th century. It's in Parliament to symbolise the importance of wool to the British economy at that time. |
| the throne | it lies on the table when the House is debating. It's the symbol of the power which Parliament has won from the King. It even has its own guard, who has a very big sword. |
| the Chamber of the House of Commons | they represent two British main political parties - the Conservative Party and the Labour Party. |
| the Mace | this is the oldest part of the building. A lot of famous events and meetings have taken place here. It saw Guy Fawkes, who tried to blow up the Houses of Parliament in 1605, and in World War II bombs fell on it. |
| red lines on the carpet | he sits on the Woolsack and presides over the House of Lords. |
| statues of two Prime Ministers | he presides over the House of Commons. |
| Westminster Hall | the distance between them is two swords' lengths. In the old days MPs used to have their swords, and it was dangerous when they got angry with each other. So the lines are here to remind the MPs that they should not start a fight. |
