Suvorov was appointed commander-in-chief of the Russian army.

Polish campaign 1794

After the Polish campaign
Ekaterina I
appointed him the Fieldmarshal

Italian march

The campaign opened with a series of Suvorov's victories (Cassano d'Adda, Trebbia, Novi). This reduced the French government to desperate straits and drove every French soldier from Italy

Swiss campaign

Despite all of his protests, Suvorov was ordered by Emperor Paul to transfer his troops to Switzerland, where they came under the command of the incompetent Alexander Korsakov, who was defeated by Andre Massena at the Second Battle of Zurich.

Swiss campaign

Crossing through the Alps

Crossing through Paniks in 1799

When Suvorov battled his way through the snow-capped Alps his army was checked but never defeated.

Suvorov's Swiss campaign was the triumph of the Russian army and Suvorov military strategy.

He was promoted to the rank of Generalissimo, the fourth in all of Russian history

After the war Suvorov wrote his splendid book "The Art of War", in which he gave the main principles of troop training.
