Oxford in the past: the city

- Oxford is the oldest university in the English speaking world, it can lay claim to 9 centuries of continuous existence. There is no clear date of foundation, but teaching existed at Oxford in some form in 1096 and developed rapidly.
- 1167: Henry II banned English students from attending the University of Paris.
- The prestige of Oxford is seen in the fact that it received a charter from King Henry II, granting its citizens the same privileges and exemptions as those enjoyed by the capital of the kingdom; and various important religious houses were founded in or near the city.
- Parliaments were often held in the city during the thirteenth century.
- The Provisions of Oxford were installed in 1258 by a group of barons led by Simon de Montfort; these documents are often regarded as England's first written constitution.

University of Cambridge

- Oxford and Cambridge have had a long history of rivalry with each other.
- The University of Cambridge is the 2nd oldest university in the English-speaking world and has a reputation as one of the world's most prestigious universities.
- According to legend, the University dictated their location: well away from the centre of town, so that the possibility of quick access to London would not distract students from their work. However, there is no basis for this in written record.

Cambridge in the past: the university

- The University of Cambridge was first established in 1209 (by a group of scholars fleeing authorities in Oxford, and its oldest college, Peterhouse, was founded in 1284.)
- In 1209, scholars taking refuge from hostile townsmen in Oxford migrated to Cambridge and settled there. At first they lived in lodgings in the town, but in time houses were hired as hostels with a Master in charge of the students.
- By 1226 the scholars were numerous enough to have set up an organisation, represented by an official called a Chancellor, and seem to have arranged regular courses of study, taught by their own members.
- King Henry III took the scholars under his protection as early as 1231 and arranged for them to be sheltered from exploitation by their landlords. At the same time he tried to ensure that they had a monopoly of teaching, by an order that only those enrolled under the tuition of a recognised master were to be allowed to remain in the town.

- ❖ Trinity College was founded by Henry VIII from the two small houses of King's Hall and Michaelhouse.
- ❖ Henry VIII had issued a series of injunctions to the University in 1536 suppressing the Faculty of Canon Law and forbidding the study of scholastic philosophy. The study of canon law declined, and the Greek and Latin classics, mathematics and Biblical studies now came to the fore.

- Cambridge University Press originated with a printing licence issued in 1534

REMINDER - OXBRIDGE:

This name denotes the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. They are federations of semi-independent colleges, each college having its own staff, known as 'Fellows'. Most colleges have their own dining hall, library and chapel and contain accommodation for at least half of their students. The Fellows teach the students, either one-to-one in small groups (tutorials in Oxford and supervisions in Cambridge).
