Youth policy

In Sweden, youth policy is part of a "Swedish model". It is based on the priority of youth in various branches of state activity. There is a Minister of Youth, which is responsible for supporting of youth organizations.

In Sweden, the Minister of Youth even has the right to stop taking any decision of government if it does not comply with the principles and objectives of youth policy. If the discussion of such issues does not give the desired result, the minister of youth may appeal to the Prime Minister. Youth policy in Sweden have to solve such problems of youth as crime, alcoholism and drug addiction.

All students receive a monthly stipend of about $ 500.

Teens and crime

If the offense was committed by teen under 15 years old, he exempt from criminal liability, from 15 to 18 years - pay a fine of 200-300 crowns without imprisonment. Thus, crime in the country is practically absent.

Teens and leisure

In Stockholm, there are more than seventy teen clubs. Teenage clubs - the most important link in the education and socialization of youth and the formation of active human solidarity on peers. There is a "democratic project". It includes ten teen recreation centers. The basis of the experiment was the idea of the cooperation of teachers club members where they have equal rights. The main items are three "no" – no racism, no violence and no drugs.

This new democratic style of relations of solidarity and co-operation does not interfere with the organization and conduct of such forms of entertainment like parties, discos, meeting interesting people, hiking and ecological tours, conversely, teenagers' behavior became more relaxed.

Students on the labor market

Sweden is proud of the professional training innovators for teamwork. Its universities encourages students to disclose and develop their strengths and talents. Many programs offer a close collaboration between research institutions and industry, give students a lot of advantages during entering to the job market.

Education in Sweden

Swedish universities are the gateway to the wide range of industries: IT, telecommunications, mining, automotive, forest industry and banking.

How can such a small country like Sweden has managed to use innovation and entrepreneurship, to create a world-famous symbol of perfection, as the Nobel Prize? As the 9 millionth country may have the fourth place in competitiveness of the economy?

Much is explained by the level of education and science in Sweden. The higher education universities in Sweden are always present in the list of the top universities around the world.

Education at all levels - from middle to high school - free of charge. The status of educational institutions belong to the public sector.

Education school level starts at the age of 7 years. Secondary school education lasts 9 years at three levels - junior, middle and senior. After completing secondary education is the opportunity to continue education in the high school, or start a career and further education combined with work.

In fact, now almost 100% of Swedish students continue schooling in high school.

There aren't any exams after 9 years. Continuing education is based on the skills and aptitudes of pupils.

Sweden takes an active part in international educational projects, such as ERASMUS, TEMPUS, COMETT, both at the state. Swedish universities have large autonomy in choosing partners and determining its foreign policy.

Many universities have special international program where the language of education is English.

Vittra Telefonplan School

Students of the school Vittra Telefonplan are lucky! Headquartered in Stockholm is the Swedish free school based on the concept of creating a place where "the physical space is the most important tool for school" in the development of students.

In light of this, the team of architect Bosch Rosan has created an unconventional space where classroom abolished as such. Instead, the students relax on neon chairs, benches, whimsical art deco, or gather around the giant blue amphitheater that looks like an iceberg, rising middle of the room.
