THE HISTORY OF SEATTLE

The first white settlers was a group of Collins, who tried to stake a claim at the mouth of the river Duwamish September 14, 1851. However, despite the fact that they were the first on the site, the land was able to write to the scout group Danny, what happened on 28 September 1851. In this circumstance, the head scout David Denny, sent a message to Portland, where the other members where encouraged to come to the settlement as soon as possible and all together. It occurred on 15 November, a group led by Arthur Denny came across the ocean and found the patient, the David and the unfinished winter. The settlement was named Alki point.

After the first winter, marked by frequent showers and strong winds, almost the entire group Danny moved to a new place, which was called Duwamps or Duwamps. Remaining at the old place, the settlers renamed the village in new York Alki. In the next few years the two villages vied for the site of the main settlement, however, eventually won Duwamps. Since 1853 one of the founders of Duwamps, David Maynard campaigned for the renaming of Duwamps in Seattle, in appreciation to the leader of Cially, the main proponent of the cooperation of the Indian population of the North-Western United States with white colonists. This campaign came to fruition pretty soon, in 1855, the settlement was given the status of a city called Seattle.
