
Slang

The New York Times

ON LANGUAGE

By WILLIAM SAFIRE

Gifts of Gab

Published: August 19, 2007

- Most popular female names: Maggie, Molly, Daisy, Bailey and Abby. Males: Buddy, Jake, Max, Hunter and Cody. Both sexes, raining both cats and dogs, but probably mainly cats: Tiger.
 - What ever happened to Spot and Rover and Kitty? They went the way of yesterday's kids named Jack and Jill.
-

Campuspeak

Published: September 30, 2007

Ah-ite!

“Would you do this for me?” - “Ah-ite.”

The meaning is “O.K.” The sound is an amalgam of all and right, which used to sound like “aw-rite” but now is compressed into a sliding “a’ight,” as the teen-slanguist Fred Lynch transcribes it

Campuspeak

Published: September 30, 2007

humongous

huge and monstrous and/or tremendous

She lives in a humongous house on the hill

ginormous

gigantic + enormous

Campuspeak

Published: September 30, 2007

chillax

The new slang blend submitted by members of Professor Eble's English 314 class only a few months ago is chillax, from the adjective chill, "easygoing," and the verb relax, the combo meaning "do nothing in particular," an activity widely practiced in centers of learning throughout the nation.

Campuspeak

Published: September 30, 2007

Butterface

“Great body, but her face. . . .”

Campuspeak

Published: September 30, 2007

blockamore

nose wide open thigh five sketchy

Those middle-aged men are so sketchy. They creep me out.

all up in your grill

Schlep

September 16, 2007

He's such a shlep!
