Born: November 10, 1801

Birthplace: Luhansk, Yekaterinoslav
Governorate, Russian Empire

Died: September 22, 1872 (aged 70)

Fields: Lexicography

Vladimir Dal was a founding member of the Russian Geographical Society. He knew at least six languages including Turkic and is considered to be one of the early Turkologists. During his lifetime he compiled and documented the oral history of the region that was later published in Russian and became part of modern folklore.

Vladimir Dal was best known for Explanatory Dictionary of the Live Great Russian language. His dictionary began to have a strong influence on literature at the beginning of the 20th century.

1814 - 1826 Dal served in the Russian Navy

1819. He graduated from the St Petersburg Naval Cadet School

1826 He began studying medicine at Dorpat University and took part as a military doctor in the Russo-Turkish War and the campaign against Poland

1832 He published his first collection of fairy-tales in Russian language. Some others, yet unpublished, were put in verse by his friend Alexander Pushkin, and have become some of the most familiar texts in the Russian language.

In 1838 He was elected to the Russian Academy of Sciences.
