According to paragraph 1, why has trade been so important throughout the history of the Middle East?

- The rare and valuable metals and stones found in Middle Eastern deserts have always been in high demand in surrounding areas.
- Growing conditions throughout the Middle East are generally poor, forcing Middle Eastern people to depend on imported grain.
- Many useful and decorative raw materials cannot be found naturally in the Middle East but are available from neighboring regions.
- Frequent travel, due to limited water supplies in the Middle East, created many opportunities for trade with neighboring societies.

Which of the sentences below best expresses the essential information in the highlighted sentence in the passage? Incorrect choices change the meaning in important ways or leave out essential information.

- Tribespeople were comfortable forming personal relationships with merchants, who, like them, were bound by their promises to one another.
- Because trade was not formally regulated, merchants were careful about whom they trusted and often conducted business with people they knew personally.
- While trade among merchants relied somewhat on regulation, among tribespeople trade was based on personal relationships and careful character evaluation.
- Because tribespeople were bound only by their promises to one another, personal relationships were formed only after careful weighing of character.

Answer Choices

Persian and Arabian merchants traveled great distances to sell their finished goods at the marketplaces of ancient Sumeria.

Revenue from trade was unevenly distributed, causing Middle Eastern societies to be characterized by growing distinctions in wealth and power.

Qualities that were valued in the mercantile economy included individualism, hard work, loyalty, and the willingness to take risks.

As production increased, centralized control over production also increased, leading in turn to more-centralized control over fellowship and worship.

Crafts were produced by skilled artisans working in close, egalitarian relationships with their masters and other fellow guild members.

The stability of Middle Eastern governments was threatened by their lack of control over international trade patterns and over their own peripheral territories.
