DAMN

all these to-day who have taken on that Rutten Menagerie, and still creak their whips and tumble in Piccadilly Gross, as though London were a provincial town.

WE WHISPER IN YOUR EAR A GREAT SECRET.

LONDON IS NOT A PROVINCIAL TOWN.

We will allow Wooder Zoos. But we do not want the GLOOMY VICTORIAN CIRCUS in Proceeding Gircus.

IT IS PICCADILLY'S CIRCUS!

GASOLINE

STATIONS

Ed Ruscha, Twentysix Gasoline Stations (1963) "Artists' books began to proliferate in the sixties and seventies in the prevailing climate of social and political activism. Inexpensive, disposable editions were one manifestation of the dematerialization of the art object and the new emphasis on process.... It was at this time too that a number of artist-controlled alternatives began to develop to provide a forum and venue for many artists denied access to the traditional gallery and museum structure. Independent art publishing was one of these alternatives, and artists' books became part of the ferment of experimental forms.'
