the 1990s, the number of people with a disability in the United States has increased by 25% (U.S. Census Bureau 2000).

As a result of the increase in the number of people with a disability, the need for accessible information has become a national priority. The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) of 1990 (Public Law 101-504) is the first federal law that prohibits discrimination against people with disabilities in all areas of public life, including jobs, state and local government services, public accommodations, and telecommunications. The ADA also requires that information be made accessible to people with disabilities.

The ADA requires that information be made accessible to people with disabilities. This means that information must be available in a format that can be accessed by people with disabilities. This includes people with visual impairments, hearing impairments, and physical disabilities.
