the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There are a number of reasons why the number of children in the world is increasing. One of the main reasons is the decline in the death rate of children under 5 years of age. In 1990, the death rate of children under 5 years of age was 100 per 1,000 live births. By 2000, this rate is expected to fall to 60 per 1,000 live births (United Nations 1994). This decline in the death rate of children under 5 years of age is due to a number of factors, including improved nutrition, better medical care, and the widespread use of vaccines.

Another reason why the number of children in the world is increasing is the decline in the birth rate. In 1990, the birth rate was 28 per 1,000 live births. By 2000, this rate is expected to fall to 20 per 1,000 live births (United Nations 1994). This decline in the birth rate is due to a number of factors, including improved education, better access to family planning services, and a change in social norms.

The increase in the number of children in the world is a major challenge for the world's governments and societies. It is necessary to ensure that all children have access to education, health care, and other basic services. It is also necessary to ensure that children are protected from violence, exploitation, and other forms of abuse.

The United Nations has set a goal of reducing the number of children in the world who are under 5 years of age by 50% by the year 2000. This goal is part of the United Nations Millennium Development Goals. It is important to note that this goal is not just about reducing the number of children, but also about improving the quality of their lives.

There are a number of ways in which we can help to reduce the number of children in the world who are under 5 years of age. One way is to improve nutrition. Another way is to improve medical care. A third way is to ensure that all children have access to education.

It is important to note that the number of children in the world is not just a number. It represents the lives of real people. We need to ensure that all children have the opportunity to live a healthy and happy life.

The number of children in the world is a complex issue. It is important to understand the reasons why the number of children is increasing and to take steps to address this issue.
