"Right," she said, slugging through her coffee.
"Green light, now figure it out." I looked at her.
"What do we do when a light turns green?"
Martine crumpled her paper and said,
"So," she said. "Did you decide yet?"
"Huh?"

"About the truck. Yes, or no?"
"What truck?" I asked.
"Everett's truck, what else. It's a good one."
"I didn't have the remotest opinion of it," couldn't imagine why she thought I would. I was sation on Rewind. Came up empty. "Well, it always looked fine to me. But fine is not the same

"You don't think it's a stupid idea, though?"
"What idea is that?" I asked her.
"You and me going in on it?"
"Going in on it?" I asked. "You mean, on the and me? Buying a truck?"

"Jesus! Where have you been?"
"Sorry," I said. "I must have missed something."
We were on her block now, and I had been let her out in the street. Instead I pulled her out
"I've got a lot on my mind," I told her. "What's you that I'm a victim of rank ignorance, huh?"
"What was the point? What have I wanted to She could have chosen a better moment for it. On other hand, she was just about the best friend I had world, and so I turned to face her and said, "I cerely apologize. Run it by me again."
She sighed. "See, Everett bought that truck in Howard County—" she said.

"Howard County, you?" I tried to look at her, but she sible. —and he was supposed to pay for it in three or four installments. Only he kept falling behind and he never do it for him. And now he wants to move to Howard County where a truck wouldn't be any use to him, so he says to mom, "You take the truck, I can't keep up the payments."
says, "When did you ever, I'd like to know! Look what do with a truck?" And that's why she phoned me with
I wanted to buy it."

In the dusk, Martine was all black and white. She is do with a truck? And that's why she phoned me with
I wanted to buy it."
Black eyes alighted with purpose, black hair shinning in a
I wanted to buy it."
Black angles around her high white cheekbones.
"And you're suggesting the two of us break up and together," I said.
"Well, for sure I can't swing it on my own, but I can age the installments, just barely, if you'd give me some she's already paid: twenty-four hundred!" I said. "Martine, why "Twenty-four hundred? And I'm still to help her out come to exactly half of that. And I'm still to help her out don't forget?"
"Oh, well," she said, "but not if you wish off you
"Pardon?"
"Your car's worth thirty thousand, but you know how looked it up in a book?"
I started laughing. I said, "My car's worth what?"
"They've got these books that give you that figure for every used car ever made. So I went to the bookstore and I flipped through one, and there it was: $15,000. My car coupe in excellent condition is worth thirty thousand dollars.
I was stunned. But I did think to say, "The usual value claim my car is in excellent condition."
