- ⦿ A phobia (from the Greek: φόβος, Phóbos, meaning "fear" or "morbid fear")
- ⦿ This is a persistent fear of an object or situation
- ⦿ In the event the phobia cannot be avoided entirely

Psychologists and psychiatrists classify most phobias into three categories:

Social phobia:

Fears involving other people or social situations such as performance anxiety or fears of embarrassment by scrutiny of others, such as eating in public

Specific phobias:

Fear of a single specific panic trigger such as spiders, snakes, dogs, water, heights, flying, catching a specific illness, etc. Many people have these fears but to a lesser degree than those who suffer from specific phobias.

Agoraphobia:

A generalized fear of leaving home or a small familiar 'safe' area, and of possible panic attacks that might follow.
