

Paul William Walker

Paul William Walker was an American actor, model and philanthropist.

Early life and education

- Walker, the son of Cheryl (née Crabtree), a fashion model, and Paul William Walker III, a sewer contractor and a fighter who was a two-time Golden Gloves champion, was born in Glendale, California. His ancestry was mostly English, with a smaller amount of German, and possibly Irish. His paternal grandfather, a professional boxer, had English immigrant grandparents.

Walker began his small screen career as a toddler, when he starred in a television commercial for Pampers. He began modeling at the age of two and began working on television shows in 1985, with roles in shows such as Highway to Heaven, Who's the Boss?, The Young and the Restless, and Touched by an Angel.

In 2001, Walker gained international fame for playing

Brian O'Conner.

He also founded his own charity, Reach Out Worldwide (ROWW), an organization providing relief efforts for areas affected by natural disasters.

Personal life

- Walker lived in Santa Barbara with his dogs. He and Rebecca Soteris a one-time girlfriend, have a daughter named Meadow who lived with her mother in Hawaii for 13 years and then moved to California to live with Walker in 2011.

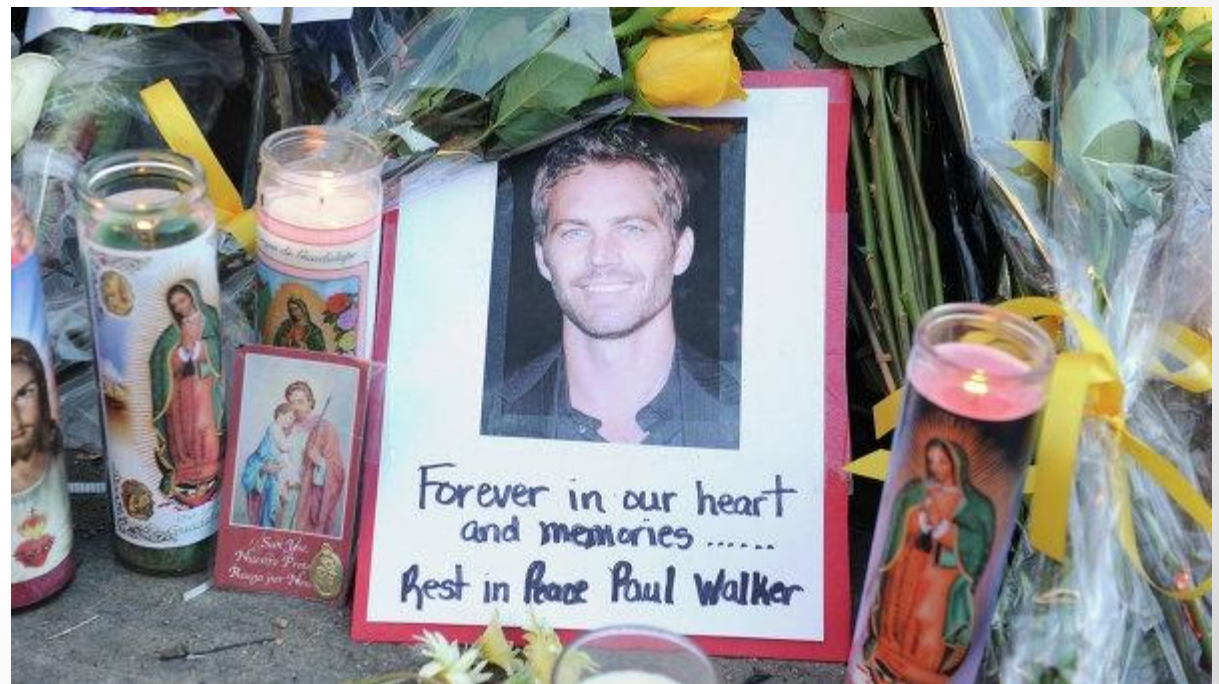

HOBBY

- Walker's first passion was marine biology; he joined the Board of Directors of The Billfish Foundation in 2006. The first friend Paul's is a Vin Diesel.

Death

- Walker died in a single car-accident on November 30, 2013 alongside friend Roger Rodas. His film Hours was released posthumously and his signature character, Brian O'Conner, will be retired in his final film Fast & Furious 7, which is slated to be released April 10, 2015.
- Paul was very good, friendly man.

R. I. P.